Busty blokes

Veteran readers of this column will recall that in September last year Radar was surprised to learn of the “designer vagina”. The man behind those particular curtains was one Dr Mark Kohout, who today is promoting a new cosmetic procedure for getting rid of “man boobs”. We called Kohout (pronounced “ca-hoot”) to ask him a few pertinent questions.

Radar: Why get rid of “man boobs”?

Kohout: It's a condition called gynaecomastia, which is prominent breasts on men, which really shouldn't be there.

Radar: What if I wanted large breasts ... would you be happy to perform for me an enlargement, rather than a reduction?

Kohout: In a transgender situation, it's a very complex process, involving psychological assessment, hormone replacement and hormone therapy, and finally the surgical transformation.

Radar: But I don't want to be a woman, I just want to be a guy with big breasts. I can't be discriminated against for that, can I?

Kohout: Er ... it's a situation I haven't come across too often, I must say. I think I'd be passing you on to one of my more, ah, adventurous colleagues.

Radar: Finally, I've always wondered what a “cahoot” is, like when someone says two people are “in cahoots”. Do you know what they're talking about?

Kohout: I have no idea.
